

Collective Intelligence

One thing that is more relevant to me mentioned by Mimi Onuoha in how she discovers her subjects of research. I do not always as a necessity, when exploring my own creative processes is to talk to others. I understand more and more now especially through the article 'Power of Crowd Sourcing' how much the power of collective labor/thinking can crush the many downsides of capitalism. However, if taken advantage of by corporations, be extractive to human labor. As Mimi suggested, there are some datasets that should not be collected because if could harm people. Like Gardian's article of Trumps's documents, how people coming together can spread mis-information. It was heartwarming though, to discover the place of art in what seems to be the battle of the world, and of egos in Reddit's launch of Place, where anyone is allowed to turn a pixel anycolor on a canvas with each click that is only allowed every few minutes. Also, realizing that wherever there is space, they are occupied for a cause that does not allow for art or any type of collectively agreed images. So when villain of destruction appears, not only did the users unified to fight it, the collective visualization was beautiful to watch.
